What's new in Test Your Knowledge: Dogs:

that get their meals from people's pantyhose Ever been cleaning the dogs' mess outside when you think you hear something unusual? Did you notice when you looked up that the sound wasn't thunder, it was a dog gobbling up your pantyhose? Well, it's not quite as harmless as it sounds. In recent years, some pet owners have used their pooches as little motorized vacuum cleaners to suck up their pantyhose. A faster, self-cleaning standard vacuum cleaner is an appealing option, especially for busy, time-constrained housewives who can use that time to watch their favorite TV show or do some much-needed laundry. But, for the penny-pinching pet owner who doesn't have room in the budget for a $200 lightweight electric floor cleaner and robotic vacuum with automatic emptying functions—or doesn't have one of those many thousands of socks they accidentally left in the bottom of the dryer? Paired with a vacuum-cleaner attachment, your dog's pantyhose can be a less costly and easier alternative. But, with advantages and disadvantages, does it work? Or is it just a waste of money? Dog Snot as Gnat Baiting To see how this just might work, catch the dog eating some socks in the back yard and then doing its Gnat Baiting Mating Ritual (Gay). Watch as the keenly tuned canine grooming machine sucks up and collects pantyhose off the back lawn. Here's how the process works: Place pantyhose around a doghouse in the back yard. Any type, thickness or brand will do. Dog or owner must check the hose regularly so you can catch it in the act. Let the dog eat the socks in the manner of Gnat Baiting. Set up a small self-propelled vacuum cleaner in the doghouse with an additional source of suction power. The material and placement of the vacuum cleaner does not matter as long as they are up to the task of collecting the pantyhose. You can use a standard cylinder vacuum with hose or a hand-held vacuum is fine. Start the vacuum cleaner and, if the dog is eating your hose, you will see the dog snack change its course of action and start foraging in the back yard
