The Chess Board icon, usually small, has the chessboard (board) divided into a chess piece is white on one side and black on the other. Pawn is represented by a small white and black figure, and a bishop by an arrow on a (rounded) shield. Pieces are in turn represented by their standard square and color: rooks are red; bishops are blue; knights are orange; and the king and queen are white. The chessboard can be in three squares by two (or four) players or in a zigzag shape for a grand or exhibition chessboard with more squares. Other pieces are indicated by their symbol, either text or a symbol representing the piece. The chessboard is usually placed between the two players, who each face their opponent on the board. In the 19th century, it sometimes appeared on the board facing the audience. History A chessboard is usually a rectangular wooden board with squares demarcated by wood, bamboo, or cardboard. In the 19th century, chessboards with pips (bishops, rooks, knights, and kings) were used, and by the 1880s the chessboard was placed on a table with the squares facing the player. The reason for this change was the growing popularity of chess, especially for the upper classes, and its increased popularity within the lower classes. In 1857, the third U.S. census showed that in the state of New York there were more chess players than horse owners. There were between 400 and 500 chess games played daily in New York city, the East Coast, and New England. By 1871, chess had spread all over the U
