Open the program and you'll get a splash screen giving you the basic reminders of how to navigate the application. In the menu screen you're greeted with the so-called "Toolbox" window. Open the window's drop down menu and choose "Layers". Once you've selected the Layers down arrow, you'll see the visual representation of the various masks, adjustments, layers, channels and paths that compose a digital print file. When you select an item on the Toolbox, such as "Select All", a selection box appears around the item that you've cursorily selected to highlight it. This is a basic visual representation of your selection, though I would have preferred that it had included a number of preview icons indicating the type of item you're selecting. Working with files remotely is a great way to get feedback from stakeholders, and you can collaborate with them on a solution without ever leaving Photoshop. Now, you can share your designs with reviewers by attaching a snapshot of the PSD, denoted by a plus sign (+) to the file name. A reviewer can view the original PSD file, and the comments the creator has flagged or made will display on the canvas, and you can address their feedback exactly where they are seeing it. This feature can be especially useful for companies that have an in-house team of reviewers and designers, or if you're working on a collaborative project with a client and looking to bring in some fresh perspective. Share for Review also speeds up collaboration between team members by letting everyone work from the same document at the same time.
